Mrs. Katherine Booth-Clibborn Delivers Sermon at First Baptist Church.

Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, daughter of the founder of the Salvation Army, delivered a sermon last night at First Baptist Church. To explain how easy it is to evangelize people, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn told of a trip on which she converted an actress. They corresponded for a time. Mrs. Booth-Clibborn, however, travels much, and the acquaintance lapsed.

Mrs. Booth-Clibborn said she received a letter from the actress after a long time with a check for 20 pounds enclosed.

She received the following message from Toronto, Canada, at night: "Canadian officers and soldiers deeply touched by your kind message of sympathy. Our sorrow is great, but we still hope strong in God."

ALASKA RED TAPE DECEYED BY LANE

number, interlocked, overlapped, cumbersome and confusing. "There is a government of the forests, a government of the fisheries, one of the reindeer and natives another of the cables and telegraphs. There is a government for certain public lands and forests, another for other lands and forests. Each of these governments is intent upon its own success and prerogative, and all are more or less unrelated and independent in their operation. Experience has demonstrated that efficient administration is best secured by centralizing responsibility and authority in the hands of a few who can be held to strict accountability for the results of their actions. The proposed development board for Alaska follows this modern and well-tested plan for securing efficient administration."

In pointing out some of the red tape caused by the present division and multiplication of authority in Alaska, Secretary Lane says:

There is one procedure for making homesteads, minerals and other land entries within the national forests; another procedure for making such entries in lands outside the forest reserves. Water power and power uses within the forest reserves are leased and operated under permits from the Forest Service; there is question as to whether authority exists for disposal or leasing of water powers elsewhere in Alaska.

Given Another Instance.

"A citizen who wanted to lease an island for fox farming carried on a correspondence with three different departments for several months in an effort to learn which had jurisdiction and authority to make the lease. It was finally decided that none of them possessed this authority. Certain islands along the south coast of Alaska may be leased by the Department of Commerce; adjoining unreserved islands may not be leased, but may be acquired under the general land laws from the Department of the Interior. Still other islands are reserved for special purposes, under the control of the Department of Agriculture."

"Vast areas in the forest reserve are entirely untimbered, but are held under the regulations of the Forest Service, while timbered lands in other sections are reserved by the Forest Service."

"Mineral claims within the forest reserve must be investigated and approved by the Forest Service before the General Land Office may grant patents. Homesteads within the forest reserves are surveyed by the Forest Service with- out cost to the settler. Homesteaders on unsurveyed lands outside the forest reserves must pay for their own survey."

"Timber in the national forests is sold at auction, under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture. Timber on other public lands are sold under different rules and regulations, made by the Interior Department."

Roads and Trails.

"Roads and trails within the forest reserve are built by the Forest Service. Roads and trails outside these reserves are built by a commission of army officers."

"The general laws forbid the exportation of timber cut off public lands in Alaska, but permit exportation of pulp made from such timber. There is no prohibition against exportation of timber cut in the forest reserve."

"Many islands frequented by birds are set aside as game reserves and are under the protection of the Biological Survey, which sends a keeper in the summer to guard some of the islands. Game animals throughout Alaska are protected by the Department of Agriculture, and are paid from an appropriation made to and disbursed by the Department of the Interior. Fur-bearing animals are under the protection of wardens appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, and work under regulations made by the Department of Commerce. Game animals are deer, moose, caribou, mountain sheep, mountain goats, brown bears, sea lions, and walrus. Fur-bearing animals comprise rabbits, squirrels, minks, lynx, mink, otter, beaver, foxes, and black bears."

"The Bureau of Fisheries employs one warden and five deputy wardens who may have something to do with solving the problem of fur-bearing animals in the territory. Game wardens are appointed by the governor, and rangers and other officers of the Forest Service are authorized by the governor to act also as game wardens. The governor's game wardens have also been appointed by the Bureau of Fisheries to protect fur-bearing animals, but at present only one person is serving in this dual capacity. Forest rangers, however, are not charged with the protection of fur-bearing animals, and the wardens and deputies of the Bureau of Fisheries have no authority over the protection of game."

Incongruity of the Laws.

The Secretary refers to the incongruity of the laws which distinguish between black and brown bears, although both may be born in the same litter, and to the protection of the giant brown bears on Kodiak Island, which are a menace to domestic animals and even human life. He refers to the inadequacy of the inspection of fisheries in the territory. He proposes that the salmon fisheries and hatcheries, and the seal industry on the Pribilof Islands continue to be under the control of the Bureau of Fisheries, but that everything having to do with the land and natural resources, beginning at the shore line should be placed under the direction of the proposed development board.

The Secretary points out a provision of the present laws by which a percentage of the receipts from timber sales in national forests must be in building roads in the forests, and says that this money was spent last year in building half a mile of plank road in one place, and a mile of trail in another place.

Division of Road Funds Uneven.

"The division of road funds and construction," he comments, "seems wholly unwise and without justification. If roads are needed in the sections of country now within the forest reserves, they should be built without regard to the percentage of timber sales; if they are more needed elsewhere in the territory, it seems the heights of absurdity to spend the money arbitrarily for constructing little patches of trails and boardwalks here and there in these reservations, just because they are forest reserves."

Mr. Lane points out that there are now only 82 miles of wagon roads, 67 miles of sled roads and 2,166 miles of trails in the whole of Alaska, for the construction and maintenance of which about $2,000,000 has been spent. He says that roads and trails are as essential to the opening of Alaska to settlement as railroads, and that these roads for several years to come must be built by the government.

The reindeer industry, now monopolized by the natives, Mr. Lane looks upon as the beginning of a great industry which may have something to do with solving the meat supply problem of the United States.
